Eat Your Sunday Dinner at Astor House.

PREFACE.

1893-94.

The publisher of this first volume of the city directory of Astoria desires to take the first opportunity of thanking the stirring, energetic citizens and business men for the patronage and assistance which alone render such a publication possible. The lively interest in our work, the cheerfully volunteered information and the abundant financial encouragement evidence the fact that the people of Oregon's Only Seaport appreciate the value of a good directory. Nor is the compilation of a directory the simple, easy task that some people suppose. It is not enough to skim hurriedly over the city once and throw the results hastily together into a volume, with no further care and trouble as to whether the work is accurate and complete. Some parts of the city must be revisited again and again to verify names and addresses. By our system, the result of long years' experience in the work, every man's name is taken twice; once at his residence, and again at his place of business. If these two reports agree exactly, one is destroyed, the other used; but if they disagree ever so little, even to a letter or a figure, the canvasser goes back to learn which report is correct; and keeps going back until the point is positively settled. This increases the trouble and expense of compilation, but ensures well-nigh perfect work. Then rumors of prospective removals must be hunted down and sifted to learn the truth, that the directory may be correct right up to the day of publication.

Recognizing the fact, however, that a poor directory is worse than none, because misleading in its information, unreliable in its statements and not fairly indicative of the city it claims to represent, the publisher of this volume has exhausted every means that years at the business could suggest to make it complete and reliable, regardless of expense and trouble. He has not undertaken the work with the purpose of getting all he can out of this first volume, never to appear on the scene again ; but, peering into the city's future, he can easily forsee the advantage of a life-long association with a place of such grand certainties ; and knowing he will be judged by this first effort, must need make it one which will ensure continued confidence and good will through all the coming years of growth and development. Nor does he see any reason to be ashamed of the work now that it is finished. True, there are errors, which must be true of all human work, but errors have been reduced to a minimum by the exercise of constant care and watchfulness and this volume will stand comparison with any similar book published. The publisher hopes to make each succeeding volume of more and more value to the city of his choice, and take thereby some part in the upbuilding of the future mighty metropolis of this vigorous state.

The past of Astoria reads like a romance, and is one that historians delight to write about, as it is the oldest English settlement on the Pacific Coast. Astoria is the county seat of Clatsop county, and is situated near the mouth of the Columbia river about fifteen miles from the Pacific ocean. The climate is delightful and very healthful and already it is recognized as a great summer resort. Ocean steamers arrive here from all parts of the world and the river boats ply regularly to Portland, connecting with all trains from that point and communication by steamers is had with all coast points.

It is difficult for a stranger to realize the wonderful advantages and resources Astoria possesses, and which will in a short time make her the metropolis and commercial port of the Pacific Northwest, situated as she is on the largest fresh water harbor in the world and one of the safest to enter. The depth of water now on the bar—thanks to the great jetty now almost completed by the government—is 30 feet at low tide and 40 feet at high tide. Astoria is the head center of the salmon canning industry and which annually puts millions of dollars in circulation among its people. Back of Astoria a few miles begins the vast forests of the finest timber that ever grew, and which as soon as it is developed will add greatly to the city's prosperity. The country immediately about Astoria is hilly, but it has many fertile valleys that produce the cereals, hay, vegetables and fruit, wonderful in variety and quality. The city is beautifully situated on a promontory peninsula embraced by the Columbia River bay on the north, Young's River bay on the south and terminating at Smith's Point on the west. The average width is about six miles. It has three large sawmills, numerous canneries, machine shops, boat factories, etc. Twenty-five or thirty steamboats, numerous sloops and schooners, large and small, ply the waters of the Columbia and its tributaries in its vicinity. The only thing that Astoria now stands in need of to place her in the rank, she by virtue or her location should occupy, is the bands of steel to connect her with the transcontinental railroads. After many disappointments the dawn of her railroad adversity is nigh, and before many more months roll by, her fondest hopes in this direction will be realized.

The population of Astoria, based on this directory, is not less than 9000, and shows a satisfactory increase over its population as given by the last census.

Again thanking the citizens for their kindly aid and encouragement, this first volume is submitted to the critical eye of a discerning public by

Yours Faithfully,

GO TO THE ASTOR HOUSE.

ILWACO, WASH.

This enterprising and progressive town is located in Pacific County, Washington, twelve miles from Astoria, on Baker's Bay close to the Columbia River. It is the southern terminus of the Ilwaco Railway & Navigation Co.'s railroad, and has daily steamboat connection with Astoria. Located as it is near the finest beach on this coast, it is destined to make a city of no mean proportions in the near future. The town contains several salmon canneries, a saw mill, city hall with a seating capacity of 500, fire department, water works, private bank, a weekly paper (the Journal) and all lines of business are well represented. The town was incorporated in 1890, and has a full set of town officers. It contains several church societies and a fine public school. The secret societies that maintain organizations here are the Masons, A. O. U. W. and I. O. O. F. The scenery of the place and the elegant beaches, fine hunting and fishing, make it a very attractive summer resort, and during the summer months it is thronged with people from the interior. Telephone line extends to Fort Canby. The government maintains a telegraph line, also the Columbia River Telegraph Co. Pacific Coast Express Co. Population, 1000. Daily mail.
